

ABSTRACT

A novel method of manufacturing, finishing, and attaching together the components of a golf club head is presented. The method permits separate heat treatments for the components to 5 maximize hardness and strength and a novel means of attaching the components together to minimize weight.